

Crash Fatal To Orland Resident

Henry Hallanan, aged 42 years, a resident of Orland Park, was fatally injured in an auto accident on Maple Road near Joliet Friday night.

Hallanan was riding in a small coupe driven by Bernard Homering also of Orland Park. The car west bound dashed into a truck owned by E. J. Briggs, 1707 West 83rd street, Chicago, which was partly parked on the highway.

Biggs, according to his report to the Will County authorities, was having engine trouble and was endeavoring to make repairs when the crash occurred. Mr. Homering claims he did not see the truck until he hit it. The scene of the accident was near the Pilcher Park entrance on Maple road.

Hallanan suffered a crushed chest, fractured skull and other serious injuries. He was taken to the Silver Cross hospital in Joliet where he died at 11 o'clock the same night without regaining consciousness.

Homering who was also body bruised and lacerated about the head and chest was also removed to the Silver Cross hospital and was removed to his home in Orland Park Monday night.

The crash victim was the father of Harry Hallanan, Jr., who played with the Orland Park basketball team in a district tournament game against Lockport at the Joliet township high school gymnasium Friday night. The boy was called to the hospital from the school.

Hallanan was the son of the late Mr. Hallanan, funeral director of Blue Island. Surviving are his widow and three children.

Funeral services were held from the Hallanan Funeral Home in Blue Island Tuesday afternoon with Rev. A. Lach pastor of Christ Lutheran church of Orland Park officiating. Burial was in the Lutheran cemetery near Orland Park.

Mr. Hallanan has been a resident of Orland Park off and on for a number of years and of late was engaged in CWA work.

New Grocery Opens In Lincoln Estates

Mr. Arthur C. Becker, who recently purchased the property formerly known as the Popp Inn, has remodeled and redecorated the place, preparatory to installing a full line of general groceries, cigarettes etc., and will also conduct a lunch room.

The opening date is to be March 17. Accordingly Mr. and Mrs. Becker cordially invited the residents of Lincoln Estate to a good old fashioned house warming party on Monday evening March 12, V. F. W. Milk, (Mr. Becker is a comrade of Wm. Martin Post No. 725, V. F. W. of U. S.) and sandwiches were served to the guests.

Many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Becker and all of Comrade Becker's Buddies attended the party which lasted until past mid-night. After the general greetings were over Comrade Commander S. Tyler mustered all the huskies he could and they went to the club rooms to requisition the Post piano.

Our good and obliging Comrade A. Elphick was immediately drafted into service and soon his nimble fingers drew forth such strains of Waltz Rhythm that soon brought everyone to the floor.

It was a "wonderful party" was the enthusiastic assurance of every one as they wished Comrade and Sister Becker the best of luck and greatest of success.

So mote it be.

Will Hold Stag

C. A. Mitchel & Son, of the Mitchel Brewery at Mokena, had to postpone the stag party they were to sponsor Monday on account of the absence of Mr. Mitchel Sr., due to a meeting at Peoria of a brewery he is interested in, so the party will be held this coming Monday evening. A boxing bout will be the main feature of the party. All the married men of this section are invited to attend and personal invitations have also been issued.

SEEK TO DIVERT WOLF RD. ROUTE; CASE CONTINUED

A last minute attempt was made last Saturday to influence public opinion in Mokena and Frankfort to favor the location of the Wolf road from the Hickory creek bridge via a westerly route to the Lincoln highway instead of the straight route.

Over a thousand unsigned circular letters were mailed in both of the towns, many of these letters, being addressed to people who have been dead for years and to others who have moved away.

These letters were along the same old line of argument about the timber which would be destroyed if the straight line is followed and about the extra cost to the county in construction costs, etc. The letter urged the re-location of the route to a hill top connection with the Lincoln highway 2000 feet west from the old Mokena road.

With the letters were reply postal cards printed and addressed to states attorney W. R. McCabe favoring the western route. Most of the people receiving these letters and cards were so disgusted with this silly propaganda that they destroyed them or ignored them entirely, while a few wrote across the cards that they were in favor of the straight line only and mailed the cards to Mr. McCabe.

The proponents of the westerly route do not tell the public of the two large culverts which would have to be built on this route, of the condemnation suits that would be encountered for right of way nor of the curves that would be created or of the fact that if Wolf road would be connected with the Lincoln highway over the westerly route it would be the end of Wolf road as its continuation south to route 51 would not materialize.

Reference is made in the letters about Womens Clubs being interested in the matter. The women of the Garden Club of Joliet is the only Women's Club who have shown any active interest against this road. It is the opinion of the majority of the residents of Frankfort township that many members of this Women's Club do not know where Wolf road is located and that it is not for them to poke their noses in the affairs of this district as they have plenty to do if they take care of things in their own city and township. Let the Joliet women mind their own business.

The bugaboo about the excessive costs for paving the highway straight is all bosh. The westerly location in fact would cost as much if not more.

Immediately after the letters in question were out, the Wolf road boosters got busy and circulated petitions in Mokena and Frankfort and secured a large number of names of people favoring the straight line route. The people of Frankfort and Mokena demand that Wolf road be located on the straight route.

In the condemnation proceedings against C. M. Cleveland for the straight line right of way thru his farm, the county has won out. The obstacle which has held up the setting of a price by a jury for the land condemned has been a temporary injunction suit brought by the school directors of the Cleveland school district. This suit was to have come up Thursday morning before Judge Hunter of Kankakee county in the Circuit Court of Will County, but attorney Wm. D. Heise representing Mr. Cleveland received a telegram Wednesday that his presence is required in a case in New York City this week. Judge Hunter then granted a continuance of the case to Friday, March 23rd or Monday, March 26th at the latest.

There is only one way for Wolf road to go and that is straight to the Lincoln Highway and then straight thru south to route 51. No other route is logical or feasible.

Crack Tinley Park Wing Shots Bring Down 2 Crows

An army of 33 men armed with shot guns and rifles went on a crow hunt on the old Mitchell farm in the town of Frankfort last Wednesday night. The "army" made up of hunters from Blue Island, Tinley Park, Orland Park and Frankfort headed by a game warden started on a march to exterminate the "enemy" of 3,000 crows. After stumbling over stumps, fallen trees, running into wire fences and ditches, they finally located the crows rendezvous in a few tall, dead trees.

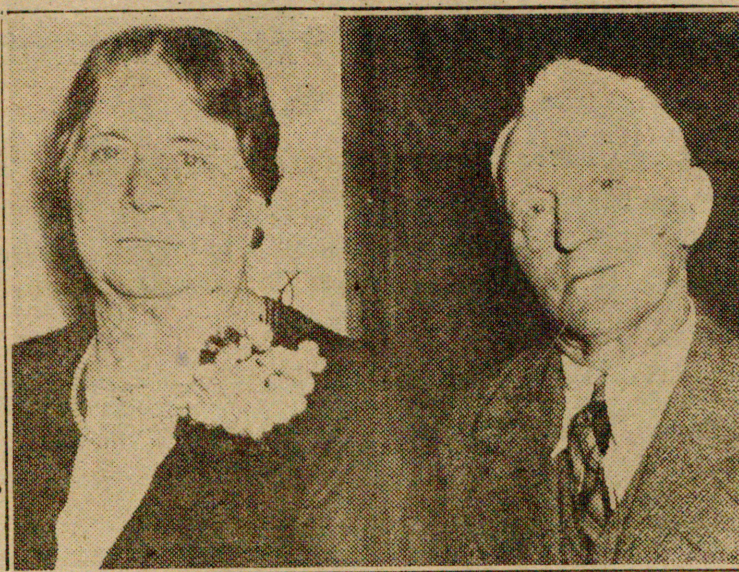

A premature discharge of fire arms by the front line "troops" was the cause of the crows making a sudden flight and their fleeing legs made a sound like the mighty whirling of an air plane armada.

Only two crows were brought down and these were shot by Wm. F. Koehler and George Lorenz of Tinley Park, crack wing shots of Cook County. If these marksmen had not been in the party the two crows might have escaped.

The game warden took a nose dive over a fallen tree and the air was blue when members of the crow hunting party tried to assist him on his feet. He angrily shouted "Let me alone, and do less talking."

The footsore and luckless hunters returned to Tinley Park about ten o'clock that night.

Brother of Mokena Pastor Drops Dead

Rev. Paul G. Moritz, of Cleveland, Ohio, vrother of Rev. E. J. Moritz, pastor of the St. John Evangelical church at Mokena, dropped dead during Sunday School services in his church last Sunday morning.

The Cleveland Plaindealer carried the following story:

Rev. Paul G. Moritz, minister of Immanuel Evangelical Church, fell dead Sunday morning as the scripture lesson was being read in the Sunday School session of his church in Sussex School, Shaker Heights.

D. J. Brunner, 2689 Wicklow Rd. Shaker Heights, Sunday School superintendent, was reading the scripture, and Rev. Mr. Moritz was seated on the platform overlooking the audience. Suddenly Mr. Moritz slumped forward in his chair. Brunner, noting the minister's condition, went to his assistance.

A physician and the Shaker Heights fire department were called, but 45 minutes work with a resuscitator failed to revive Mr. Moritz. Death was due to a heart attack, it was said.

Rev. Mr. Moritz had been pastor of the church ten years, coming to Cleveland from Independence, Mo. His earlier pastorates were in Iowa and Mo. Soon after his coming the congregation moved from its former location at Kinsman Road S. E., and E. 72nd Street to the school building. With officials of the church he had been working toward the erection of a new church plant in Shaker Heights.

Mr. Moritz was a graduate of Elmhurst (Ill.) College, Eden Theological Seminary, St. Louis and the University of Chicago Seminary.

He lived at 3666 Stoer Avenue, Shaker Heights. Surviving are his wife, two sons, Kenneth, 12 and David, 10, and a daughter Carol, 3.

Rev. E. J. Moritz returned to Mokena from the funeral of his brother Thursday.

Mokena Public and Sun. Schools Closed By Scarlet Fever

Due to an outbreak of scarlet fever, mumps and whooping cough in Mokena, it was decided at a meeting of the Mokena school board, members of the PTA and the local Board of Health held Wednesday morning to be to the best interests of the community if the school be fumigated and not be reopened until next Monday morning.

The closing order was finally so arranged as to take in the Sunday schools of the Mokena M. E. church, Immanuel Lutheran and St. John's Evangelical churches and all these churches have joined hands and will not have any Sunday school on this coming Sunday morning so as to cooperate in stamping out the spread of these maladies.

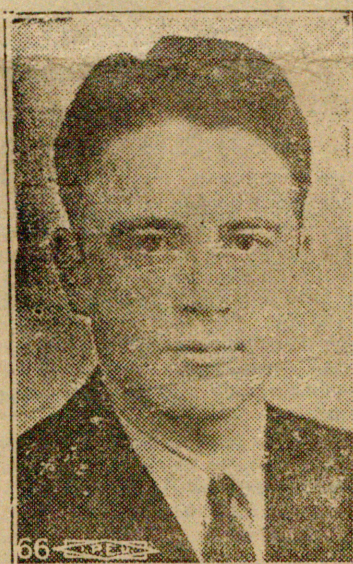

It is said that the carelessness of some parents in allowing their children were already ill, to attend school and parties, thus exposing all those who were present.

Dr. E. G. McMahon of Mokena has been engaged to examine all pupils returning to school next Monday morning. He is to be paid $10 for services and each pupil is requested to bring 10c to help defray the cost. The P. T. A. will pay for those pupils who are unable to bring any money.

An historical pageant of the state of Illinois will be staged at Soldier Field in Chicago June 30, it was announced by the Illinois Police association which is sponsoring the event in celebration of its fiftieth year of existence.

Funeral services for Miss Julia E. Alden, eighty-two years old, a lineal descendant of John Alden of colonial days, were held in Aurora. Miss Alden died in the home of her cousins, the Misses Harriet and Edna Walker, in Oswego. Her home, for the greater part of her life, was in Aurora. She was a daughter of George Alden, who more than sixty years ago owned one of the finest farms in the Aurora area.

One of Warden Frank Whipp's wards was summoned from his state penitentiary cell to do the job that had balked the efforts of ten clerks and a locksmith—open the fifty-year-old prison safe. Joseph Allman, serving a ten-year stretch for larceny, was chosen after many hours of hesitation by Warden Whipp to do the trick. The warden finally decided that inasmuch as Allman had done a similar good turn for Whipp's predecessor it would be entirely ethical.

Substantial praise for constructive legislation and economy was given the present general assembly in a report issued by the Legislative Voters' league. Much of the credit was awarded to Governor Horner for his influence in these directions. The league said that this assembly is the first since the war to reduce the cost of government in Illinois. Then the report continued: "It enacted a greater variety of constructive legislation than any other previous legislature within half a century. It doubtless will be remembered longest as the assembly which, in co-operation with a governor pledged to retrenchment, took effective action to lighten the heavy burden of taxation in the state."

Ruling on a six month industrial dispute between workers and officials of the National Lock company of Rockford, the national labor board charged the company with "studied hostility" to the purpose of the NRA and prescribed three steps looking to the resumption of normal conditions at the company's plant. Under threat of court prosecution the labor board decreed that the strike, in which 400 men were said to be involved, should end at once. The company was ordered to reinstate on its rolls all strikers who desire reinstatement, and was directed further to permit a federally conducted election among its employees for the purpose of selecting representatives to bargain collectively with the company management.

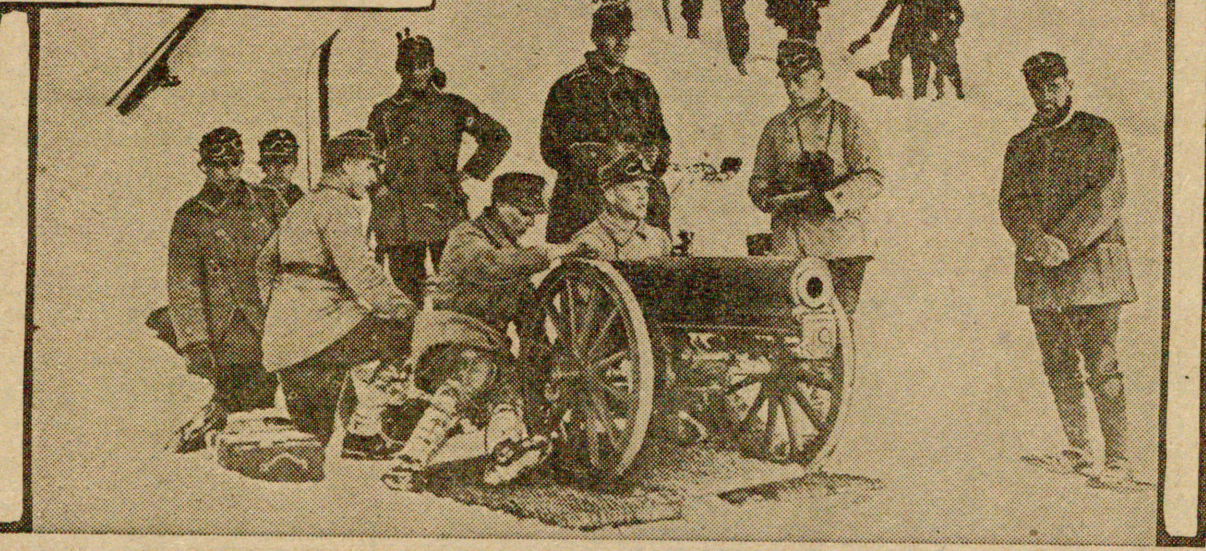

Chief Justice Warren H. Orr of the Illinois Supreme court signed a stay of mandate that paved the way for a rehearing of the case in which the high court declared the Cook county grand jury system illegal. The action prevents the decision from becoming effective until the court has ruled on Attorney General Otto Kerner's petition for a rehearing. The stay of mandate automatically halted proceedings in the case of Jack Lieber, Chicago robber now in Joliet prison, whose conviction was reversed in the decision that threw Cook county crime fighting forces into confusion. Should the Supreme court reaffirm its decision in a rehearing, law enforcing officials said, 700 indictments would be found illegal and retrials and re-indictments would cost Cook county taxpayers upwards of $1,000,000.

The injunction was granted by Judge Edward B. Shurtliff at the request of club officials.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

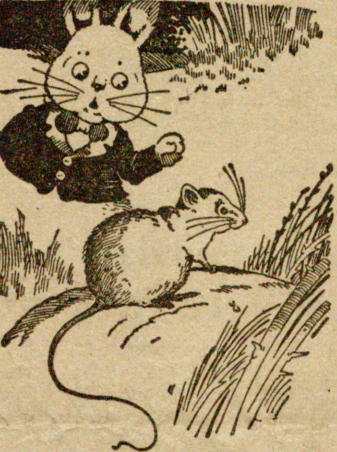

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

A PAIR OF HANDY POCKETS

"YES, indeed," continued Nimbleheels, "I take the very greatest care of my tail. The way I feel about it is that I might just as well lose my life as my tail. I probably would anyway."

"Probably would what?" asked Peter, looking puzzled.

"Probably would lose my life, of course, if I should lose my tail," replied Nimbleheels.

"Have You a Pocket?" Peter Demanded.

plied Nimbleheels. "You see, in times of danger I depend on jumping to escape, but without looking correctly there would be no use in jumping. And as I have already told you, it is my long tail which keeps my balance in the air. But such a long tail is a great help," added Nimbleheels with a funny little sigh.

"I should say so!" exclaimed Peter Rabbit.

The eyes of Nimbleheels twinkled. "I should like to know what you know about it," said he.

Peter glanced at his own funny little bunch of a tail and laughed. "Nothing," said he. "My tail isn't the least bit of care. But I was thinking that if I had as long a tail for my size as you have for your size it certainly would be some tail and some care. I suspect that lots of times when I thought myself safe inside the dear Old Brier Patch my tail would be way outside. I really don't see how you keep track of so much tail."

"Oh," replied Nimbleheels, "that is easy enough. When I am not jumping or running about I keep it curled around in front of me. Then I know just where it is. By the way, Peter, do you mind if I go look for a pocketful of seeds? I am rather hungry."

"Look as much as you like. I think you will find plenty here in the Old Brier Patch, but before you go tell me what you mean by a pocketful," replied Peter.

"Just exactly what I said," retorted Nimbleheels. "If I can just get a pocketful of seeds I can bring them back here and we can talk while I eat them."

Peter blinked his eyes and stared at Nimbleheels in the rudest way. It certainly was most impolite.

"Have you a pocket?" Peter demanded.

"Certainly. Of course," replied Nimbleheels. "How in the world was I going to get a pocketful of seeds if I hadn't a pocket to put them in? As a matter of fact, I've got two pockets, and mighty handy pockets they are. I really can't imagine how anyone can get along without pockets. Next to my tail I think more of my pockets than of anything else I possess."

Peter was still staring as rudely as ever. "I don't see any," said he.

"Where are they?"

"In my cheeks, of course. Where else would they be?" replied Nimbleheels. Peter didn't know where else they might be, so he said nothing.

"They are so handy that I simply couldn't get along without them," continued Nimbleheels.

Peter sighed. "I wish I had a pair of handy pockets," said he.

The Swing in the Apple Orchard

By ANNE CAMPBELL

THE swing in the apple orchard Was loveliest in spring, We swayed in the dewy morning Where trees were blossoming. Our aim was to reach the fragrance Of the highest bloom of all, The birds in their brown nests trembled, We heard their mother call.

The swing in the apple orchard, When summer shed its gold, Was drenched with a leafy splendor That was regal to behold. We saw, as the apples ripened, The silver hand of Time, His shadow across the orchard Plucked apples in their prime.

The swing of the apple orchard In autumn, brown and sore, Was shunned by the busy children, For the school bell sounded clear. The swing was a teasing ribbon Until the end of May, And it hangs now in my remembrance, The ghost of a bygone day! (Copyright.)—WNU Service.

Money and Time Needed to Duplicate Pyramid

An interesting study by New York architects has developed the fact that it would cost $156,000,000 and require five years to build a facsimile of the great Egyptian pyramid of Cheops at this time in Central park, New York. The estimate is based upon erecting the structure of stone and using all modern equipment now available. The estimate continues to state that 2,500,000 man hours of labor would be involved in completing the task with modern machinery. It is estimated that 100,000 workers toiled twenty years in building the original. One of the architects, who studied the pyramid problem quite seriously, has made a perspective drawing showing such a pyramid in Central park. His drawing, made to scale, shows the tip of the pyramid on the same elevation as the forty-second floor of the R. C. A. building.

The WEDDING MARCH MURDER

SYNOPSIS

Waiting in the minister's study, Jim Franklin, about to be married to Doris Carmody, is stabbed to death. Peter Cardigan, with Sergeant Kilday, begin the investigation. Franklin, while waiting, had visitors, among them his mistress, "Choo Choo" Train; his intended wife's father, Ambrose Carmody; her brother, Rylie; Daniel Bullis, politician, and a woman in a blue frock. Rylie Carmody admits trying to stop the wedding, after being informed by Webster Spears that Franklin was still friendly with Choo Choo, despite his approaching marriage. Kilday secures the dead man's keys. From Callis Shipley, one of the bridesmaids, Rylie's friend, the investigator learns nothing. An interview with Bullis is fruitless. Webster Spears admits informing Rylie Carmody of Franklin's relations with Choo Choo, for Doris Carmody's sake, in the hope of preventing the wedding. Fletcher, Franklin's man-servant, is reticent. In an interview with Milo Dunbar, Franklin's law partner, and search of the dead man's office, reveals nothing of importance. Choo Choo admits her relations with Franklin were to continue after his marriage. Six of the seven keys Franklin carried are traced to their respective locks. One the investigators are unable to place. Callis Shipley, again interviewed, confesses previous deception, but nothing new is elucidated.

"There's nothing else left to say," retorted the girl. "Now may I go?"

Peter, who had championed the girl's cause in spite of himself, felt a reluctant admiration for the manner in which she defied the detective, even though his faith in her innocence of all knowledge of the crime had been shaken.

Kilday scowled. He was evidently at a loss as to how to proceed further with his questioning. "All right," he declared reluctantly, "you may go, but," he repeated the instructions he had previously given Webster Spears about remaining within reach. "We'll probably want another talk with you, later," he added.

The minute the girl had left, an assistant announced the arrival of Daniel Bullis. The sergeant's surprise was apparent as he looked up at the politician, whose bulk filled the doorway.

"Come in, Mr. Bullis. What can I do for you this morning?"

Bullis smiled with his lips, while his eyes darted inquisitively about the room. "You sent a man for my fingerprints," he declared. "Why?"

"Finger-prints?" Kilday affected not to understand.

The politician eased himself into a chair which creaked under his weight. "Oh, your man didn't ink my fingers. But he was very anxious that I take a cigarette from one of those polished cases of yours. I'd heard of them before." He studied the detective thoughtfully. "I don't smoke cigarettes, Sergeant," he added. As though to emphasize his point he bit the end from a fat black cigar.

"I wouldn't be surprised but what I'd left several finger-prints in the study of that church, Sergeant," Bullis went on evenly. His pale eyes had come to a focus on Kilday but there was no way of reading the expression behind that gaze. "It would be odd if I hadn't. I was there, you know. I don't make any bones about that."

Again he paused. He gave the impression of choosing each word deliberately. Peter found himself weighing them for any hidden significance not at first apparent, but could find none. Evidently it was only the man's manner.

"It's funny," Bullis rambled on, "we've both been around this town a long time, but we'd never met before. Of course, I had heard about you, Sergeant, from time to time."

The sergeant smiled. "I'd heard a great deal about you, too, Mr. Bullis."

The politician nodded. "I guess you have," he said. "Most people do. And you'll hear more of me. I intend to hang around a good while longer."

It sounded like a challenge. Peter saw the sergeant stiffen.

"Now about those finger-prints," Bullis' voice had again lapsed into a monotone. "You know I was there. What do you expect them to prove?"

"Possibly nothing," Kilday declared. "It's a means of identifying every one there. Often finger-prints provide us with a means of elimination. By identifying those persons we know to be innocent, we have left only those of the person who is guilty. The simple fact that there are finger-prints of an individual in that room doesn't convict that person."

The officer faced the politician squarely. "Not that I'm making any promises, you understand."

Bullis nodded silently.

"About those finger-prints," the detective continued. "You say my man didn't get them?"

"I don't smoke cigarettes," Bullis repeated.

The sergeant extracted a cigarette case from a drawer of his desk. "As I've explained, it's largely a matter of form, but I'll need samples of yours, Mr. Bullis."

The politician made no move to take the case. "I don't like finger-prints," he said. "They're too permanent. I've already told you I was there."

"Did you have a revolver, Mr. Bullis?"

The politician's eyes betrayed a flicker of interest. "No."

"Did you see a revolver in that study, or handle one?"

"No."

"Well, I have to identify a thumb-print on a revolver. You've nothing to worry about, apparently. Besides," he added smilingly, "this isn't a permanent record. These specimens can be destroyed, after we compare them."

Bullis still hesitated, then, taking the cigarette case, he pressed his fingers against it deliberately. "I'll depend on you, Sergeant," he said. "I'll confess I don't like the idea."

That was all. With only a nod to Peter, he lumbered from the room.

The sergeant puffed meditatively after Bullis' departure. "What do you suppose was on his mind? There's something worrying him, Peter. He didn't seem worried when I mentioned the revolver. He knows we couldn't have anything else on him, but he's bothered. Can you figure it out?"

"It may be just as he says," the novelist pointed out, "a natural aversion to being finger-printed. Remember, if you can judge the man by his reputation, he's had a great deal to do with the underworld. That would explain such an aversion."

"We'll soon know if that's all that's worrying him," Kilday was assured. "Come on into the Bertillon room. I'm going to check up on that thumb-print on the revolver."

With the aid of Kilday's polished cigarette cases, the finger-prints of most of those under suspicion had already been collected. The sergeant himself had obtained those of Choo Choo Train, Callis Shipley and Daniel Bullis. The men who had been dispatched for the others had returned by now, and the work of attempting to identify the five sets of prints found in the study, together with the thumb mark on the revolver, had begun.

"We'll Probably Want Another Talk With You Later."

In the Bertillon laboratory, each print had been photographed after careful preparation. Then the work of matching began, each whorl and line of a print serving as a guide to the identity of the person making it. On a flat desk in the center of a room whose walls were lined with pictures of criminals whose identity had been established in this very way, lay a number of square white cards. Some of these had as many as half a dozen different finger-print photographs pasted on them. Others had but one. Previously, the prints had been carefully sorted out, and the duplicates all placed together.

In a second orderly pile were the negatives of specimens collected by the detectives, from the suspects. A clerk armed with a reading-glass was attempting to match the prints in the two piles.

"One set has already been matched," declared the sergeant. He handed Peter two cards, clipped together, and pointed out the means by which the specimens had been identified. "Nick Royce," said the sergeant. He read the label attached to the card. "Finger-prints found on the telephone and on surface of desk. H'm. Seems to bear out his story, doesn't it?"

"So far, at least," agreed Peter.

The officer indicated a vacant chair for the novelist and drew one up for himself. "What luck are you having with the one on the gun?" he inquired of his assistant. "That's the most important one."

Silently the man handed him another clip of cards. Kilday inspected them earnestly, and then passed them on to Peter.

"The thumb-print matches these prints found in the study," he said. "Now we have only to find which one of our suspects left these prints."

Reaching among the specimens, he selected those of Webster Spears. He made no attempt to conceal his eagerness as he compared these with the print on the revolver, but after only a moment he looked up, frowning.

"Not Spears," he said.

He next tried specimens of Rylie Carmody's finger-prints, with the same disappointing result. He slammed the cards impatiently upon the desk.

"What do you think of that, Peter?" If neither of them is guilty, what was the girl trying to protect them for? Unless, a light dawned on his face, "h'm! Perhaps it was herself she was protecting."

But Callis Shipley's prints did not match the one on the gun, either.

Neither Callis Shipley's nor Choo Choo Train's prints could be identified with any of those found in the study. This disappointed the officer. He stared at one of the cards in perplexity. "I'd have sworn that these were a woman's prints," he said. "Small and slender. Of course, they might belong to a boy or a small man." His tone was doubtful.

Nor did they find any prints which corresponded with those of Rylie Carmody and his father. Apparently neither had left any marks in the study.

"Odd," said Peter.

Kilday raised bushy eyebrows.

"I mean that I'm more suspicious when a man leaves no finger-prints," the novelist explained. "I have always felt that the guilty man, or the man who knew that a crime had been or would be committed, took precautions against leaving finger-prints which might later identify him. The person who scatters finger-prints about either has a clear conscience or is very foolish. I don't think we are dealing with the latter class here."

"Then how do you explain the print on the gun?" demanded Kilday.

"That's what I asked you a bit ago. I can't explain it. I'm not even trying to, yet."

The work went patiently on. Daniel Bullis' were the next prints identified. They discovered that he had left marks on both the front and rear doors of the study, as well as on the desk. But this was of scant value. They already knew he had been in the room, and they were able to prove nothing further. The thumb-print was very different from the one on the revolver.

Yet none of the other prints would match. Of all those found in the room, only those of Doctor Abernathy, Nick Royce and Dan Bullis matched. As for the others, Ambrose Carmody and his son, Rylie; Choo Choo Train and Callis Shipley had none of them left prints. Of the two unidentified sets, one were those Kilday had been so sure were made by a woman.

The thumb-print on the gun had been identified with prints found in the room, but not with those of any of these persons under suspicion.

Kilday puffed thoughtfully, his attention apparently centered on the blue clouds that encircled him. "Two sets still unidentified," he mused aloud. "One of them apparently belonging to a woman, but neither Callis Shipley's nor Choo Choo Train's. That would be our woman in blue."

"The other set matches the print on the gun, and that doesn't fit any of our previous notions of the crime. Who else was there, whose specimens we haven't got? Why did the murderer go there with a revolver, then change his mind and use Doctor Abernathy's dagger? How does it happen that the murderer left a thumb-print on the revolver although he wiped the dagger clean of prints? This doesn't make sense."

"And," he continued, "why is Callis Shipley trying to protect Webster Spears? By all the laws of reason, that should be his thumb-print on the revolver."

Peter was equally puzzled. Did the fact that this print on the revolver remained unidentified absolve all those whose finger-prints did not match it from suspicion? How about Callis Shipley? Reluctantly, he was forced to admit that Kilday had ample grounds for his mistrust of her. But if both Rylie Carmody and Webster Spears were cleared of suspicion, what was the girl trying to conceal? And if that print on the gun was a clue (as it certainly seemed to be) who else should they suspect? What other finger-prints could they match against it? The woman in blue? Who was she? How could they obtain a specimen of her finger-prints? Daniel Bullis was the only person who could identify her and it seemed certain that they could expect little help from him along that line. Was there anyone else? Fletcher, Franklin's servant? That was absurd. He hadn't been near the church. There was Milo Dunbar, too. He had been there, but he had been the dead man's partner. What motive could be manufacturer from that? Besides, there was no evidence that he had been in the study at any time, other than the doubtful testimony of Nick Royce that he had been unable to find the man in the church, a short time before the wedding.

ding. As Kilday had pointed out, was not important evidence, inasmuch as it would have been almost surprising if Royce had been able to pick him out of all that throng which had crowded the church.

All these and many other doubts assailed the novelist. He could shake his skepticism concerning finger-prints, either. If there were none on the knife with which the crime had been committed, why should they have expected the murderer to have left any elsewhere? If that were true, how could he have been in the study, which his reasoning led him to believe there seemed to be no end and no beginning. Nowhere could he find a tangible fact to which he might cling or from which he might argue.

He almost wished that he might share Kilday's confidence in that thumb-print.

The door behind them was flung open by an excited subordinate.

"We've found it, Sergeant!" the man exclaimed. "We have discovered who registered that revolver when it was purchased."

Kilday made no attempt to conceal his excitement. "Who was it, man? Don't stand there like an idiot," he urged impatiently.

"It belonged to Jim Franklin himself," declared the man. "The registration shows that he bought it two years ago."

Lesson for March 18

JESUS RESPONDS TO FAITH

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 13:54-58:14:13, 14:15:21-31.

GOLDEN TEXT—Ask and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you.—Matt. 7:7.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Helps a Stranger.

JUNIOR TOPIC—When People Trust Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Mother's Love and Faith.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Faith Tested and Triumphant.

I. The Unbelief of Jesus' Own Countrymen (13:54-58).

Jesus shared the common fate of men, unacknowledged in his own country. Even his own brothers did not believe in him until after his resurrection (John 7:3-8; cf. Acts 1:14). Because of this unbelief only a limited work could be done there.

II. Jesus Responding to the Faith of the Multitude (Matt. 14:13, 14).

1. He retired to the desert (v. 13). The news of the cruel death of John the Baptist brought grief to the heart of Jesus and he withdrew to a place of quietness to commune with the heavenly Father. Jesus accepted John's death as typical of his own.

2. Followed by the people (v. 13). The people were so greatly interested in him that they followed him on foot out of the cities.

3. Jesus healing the sick (v. 14). Although the rulers had broken with him, he did not abandon his work. Though desperate and hopeless cases were brought to him, none was found too hard for him.

III. Jesus Responding to the Faith of a Woman of Canaan (Matt. 15:21-31).

1. The mother's awful distress (vv. 21, 22). Her daughter was grievously vexed with a devil. The daughter was the one who was afflicted, but it was the mother who carried the burden. No doubt this Gentile woman had heard of the fame of Jesus. His power to heal had come to her notice and doubtless many times she longed for him to come her way that her daughter might be healed. Now that he was in her neighborhood she came straightway to him.

2. The mother's fervent appeal for help (vv. 23-25). She humbly fell at his feet and pleaded for mercy. She besought him to cast the demon out. Her appeal may be considered as a model prayer.

a. It was sincere and earnest. From the depths of her heart she cried to the Lord for help.

b. It was brief and definite. In a few well chosen words she besought the Lord in behalf of her daughter.

c. It was personal and humble. The Lord is pleased when we beseech him in behalf of personal friends as well as ourselves. She came humbly, for according to Mark's account she fell at his feet (Mark 7:25).

d. It was believing and persistent. Though she was outside of the covenant people, she believed the Lord would hear a cry of need. All who accept Christ are his covenant people. She persistently begged help of the Lord. She would not accept a refusal. The Lord is pleased with the soul who

NEW WORDS TO SONGS OF DAVID

Nazi Writer "Germanizes" Great Hymns.

An Associated dispatch to the Boston Globe conveys the following interesting information:

A need for "thoroughly purging" the psalms of David "from Jewish taint" has been advanced in a new hymn book published by a leader of a new Germanic cult.

The book is by Wilhelm Teudt, a pioneer in the movement whose "guiding strength" is gained "from the religious inheritance of the German people," and consists of 75 revised psalms—in blank verse—in- stead of the original 150.

How Teudt has rewritten the poems and "Germanized" them is shown in this excerpt from his revision of the eighty-seventh psalm:

"The Lord loveth the height of Germany more than all the dwellings abroad."

"The Lord loveth the yew tree of the Odenwald and the oak of the Baltic."

"I will make mention of the vulgar Euphrates and the Ganges, where our forefathers ruled."

"Behold the lands of the Goths, the Longobards and Andalusians; it shall be said our brethren were born and died there."

"But on Osnung (part of the Teuto- burger forest) the Lord shall count those sprung from blood of the son of Mannus; Ingo Istu and Ermin." (Ancient Germanic guards.)

The original, as contained in the authorized or King James' version of the Bible, reads:

"His foundation is in the holy mountains."

"The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob."

"Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God."

"I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon to them that know me: behold Philistia, and Tyra, with Ethiopia; this man was born there."

"And of Zion it shall be said, this and that man was born in her: and the Highest Himself shall establish her.

"The Lord shall count, when he writeth up the people, that this man was born there."

"As well the singers as the players on instruments shall be there: all my springs are in thee."

Teudt frankly revealed himself as an anti-fundamentalist.

In the foreword to his volume he claimed that Christ was of pure Aryan blood—"his whole spirituality being foreign to Jews."

While not entirely eliminating the Old Testament, Teudt said many features in it were obnoxious and should be pruned.

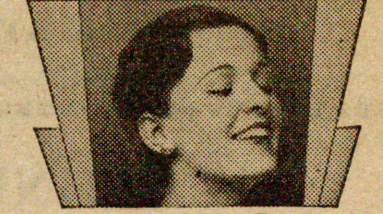

The so-called Psalms of Revenge he eliminated altogether. He said he stood for a new religion which "unites conceptions of God, nature, morality and heroism, which are the imperishable, God-given heritage of Germans."

Local Collectors Should Receive Taxes

The taxpayers of Cook County are convinced that the Suburban Area and Country Towns Assn. plan of allowing the township or local collectors to receive the taxes is the best method that has been devised and they are showing it the first days of the collection of the 1932 taxes by flocking in larger numbers than heretofore to their township collector's headquarters to pay their taxes.

There has been much discussion of the loss of time and money interest on tax anticipation warrants under the system that allows the county collector to hold the books for the greater portion of the collection period. And the taxpayers assured that they will save themselves money by paying their taxes to the township collectors are hastening to do so in their own behalf.

The same is true of the special assessments. Last year it will be remembered the Suburban Area and Country Towns Association urged the village collectors not to waste the bondholders' money by returning them to the county and then withdrawing them from a forced sale that would bring no return to those who loaned money for special improvements. The saving of thousands of dollars has been reported by many of the municipalities in Suburban Cook county since last year and the taxpayers are paying their special assessments better this year, many of the local collectors report.

The reduction of the taxes this year has been from five to twenty percent with the latter figure more prevalent throughout the suburban districts.

The Suburban Area group plans to fight on for the legislation that will make it possible for both the local and the township collectors to hold their books throughout the entire year, making only those returns to the proper county authorities which are required by the Constitution of the State of Illinois.

There is no reasonable theory advanced why this plan should not prevail and even the metropolitan press is opposed to the idea that the county assessor should be appointed and not elected as he is at present.

With the prospect of continuous wrangling in both the major political groups in Illinois for some time it will be up to the citizens as well as their leaders to make their wishes in the way of sane legislation known. Suburban leaders declare and they urge all civic-minded groups to give consideration to constructive ideas in the way of municipal legislation so that those political leaders who favor the taxpayers in fact as well as in theory might know what is expected of the man who would hold public office.

The Suburban Area group contends that a false economy that can be supported only by doctored figures results from the centralization of too much power and authority in the hands of a few. And apparent overlapping of governments in smaller groups is preferable to overlordship on the part of outsiders who do not understand or attempt to understand local conditions.

MOKENA

Why people in this modern age fall for a superstitious gag which has no merit and is utterly preposterous, is hard to understand. By this we refer to the old endless chain letter gag. It used to be that no time limit was set when this kind of a letter was to be mailed, but the latest gag is that the recipient of such a letter must copy it five times and send it to five friends within 24 hours and they in turn would contact with five other persons, etc.

Such type of letter made its appearance in Mokena this week. In part the endless chain letter reads as follows:

"Study Psalm 34 Good Luck Letter. We trust in God who will suffer all our needs. (Here five names are given of women residing in Joliet, Mokena and Chicago.)

"Copy the above. Omit first name, add your last name last, mail to five friends whom you wish prosperity. This must be done in 24 hours after receiving. Mrs. Ashford received $3,000, Mrs. Asham received $1,000. Mrs. Holmes broke the chain and lost all she possessed.

"This chain is positive to all. It will bring prosperity 7 days after sending."

What a lot of tommyrot. Trust in God and do right and do not fall for superstitious fears and you will have prosperity and enough for all your needs. All deeds bring their reward. Do not be stampeded by a lot of pagan beliefs and fears. Save your postage and paper. The quickest way to stamp out the endless chain gag is to ignore it and thus break the chain. Merely sending out such a chain letter will not bring you riches nor will ignoring it bring you trouble and loss.

John Hentsch has taken up a job near DeKalb the past week.

An east side window in the local Rock Island depot was broken when a stone picked up by the suction of a passing train was hurled thru it.

Mr. Carter night operator at the same depot who was quite badly hurt last fall when a broken bolt from a passing train hit him on the head, was slightly hurt the other day when a chunk of coal from a passing train hit his leg, inflicting a bruise.

The Mokena public school has been listed for a CWA painting project. The interior is to be redecorated. Local painters are to do all the work.

SCHOOL NOTES

March 9, at assembly the primary room presented an interesting one act play "The Pet Show". Mary, a young crippled girl, and her brother and sister are giving a pet show on the back porch to raise money for the Humane Society. Tom is making the cages for the animals. Susy hasn't any pet, but she finds a caterpillar and Tom makes a cage for it. Kelly, a little Irish boy, enters his goat. The other children bring rabbits, dogs and cats. Mary has blue ribbons, which are to be given to the best pet of each kind of animal entered. Susy decides she will receive a blue ribbon for her caterpillar as it is the only one in the show. Soon after this Augustus, the villain of the play, brings a caterpillar which Mary suspects came from his father's collection. Mary and Tom try to think of something to do to keep Augustus's caterpillar out of the show. At this time all the children come rushing in making a great deal of noise. Mary quiets them down and is told that Clancy, the goat, ate Augustus's caterpillar, cage and all. When he knows that Mary knew that the caterpillar belonged to his father, Augustus is very much embarrassed. He leaves and the show goes on. As Tom goes to present the blue ribbons he wishes Clancy luck in digesting the stuffed caterpillar.

Romona Roth and Marie Rinke are on the Honor Roll.

Miss Cowells, from the County Superintendent's office, and Roy Moore, State Inspector of two year high schools, visited us Friday, March 9.

Frank G. Brumund

Attorney - at - Law, Joliet

Candidate for Republican Nomination for Probate Judge

The history of our country from the beginning shows that many of the keenest minds of every generation have been attracted to the legal profession. This is, perhaps, a natural condition, since in that field exists the greatest opportunity for the exercise of intelligence and talents the service of mankind. Whatever may be the chief factor contributing to this condition, it is an established fact that in mentioning the names of a given number of people who are entitled to classification as the most useful citizens the members of the legal fraternity loom large.

Among many well known attorneys of Will County who by their achievement are entitled to more than ordinary rectoring is Frank G. Brumund, of Joliet, an able and fully qualified candidate for the Republican nomination for Probate Judge of Will County. Broad of vision, keen, forceful, and energetic, he has advanced to his present profession by the constant pursuit of those ideals which actuated the early lawyers of the province in founding the bar of the commonwealth. It is such useful men of affairs who are factors to be reckoned with in the advance of our community at large.

Robert W. Martin

Attorney at Law, Joliet

Candidate for

Republican Nomination for County Judge

Many members of the bar have attained a merited reputation, and justly so for included in their number are men who have given jurisprudence profound and deep study.

Robert W. Martin of Joliet, an able and qualified candidate for the Republican nomination for County Judge, is known as a lawyer of much ability. Not only has he been very successful in his profession, but he has won the esteem of the bar in general. He is possessed of a mind keenly alive to grasp any legal point and find a decision covering it. In many capacities he has demonstrated his ability to handle affairs requiring both tact and executive qualifications. So many people are under the impression that every lawyer's time is taken up in a bull-raging contest, that it is well once in a while to set the people right. The achievements of Attorney Robert W. Martin are of the constructive nature that will endure and place him in a rank still further to the fore as opportunities present themselves to give his abilities their scope of exercise; for no matter how successful a lawyer may be, there is always room for betterment. That is true of all professions, those highly specialized from which no one ever graduates. But if achievement is an index Robert W. Martin of Joliet is comfortably near the top.

William Martin Garvey

Attorney at Law, Lockport
Candidate for

Republican Nomination for County Judge

With its wealth of legal talent of marked ability, it is no mean achievement to become a successful lawyer. There are, however, a number of lawyers with lucrative and successful practices, of whom the public does not read as being counsel for sensational cases. That is because they go about their business quietly and without ostentation, aiming at the speedy and successful conclusion of their cases in hand.

Attorney William Martin Garvey of Lockport, a world-war veteran with a splendid war record, solicits your vote as a candidate for the Republican nomination for County Judge at the coming April 10th primaries, saying that he is as eager to serve in time of peace as in time of war. He is fully capable and qualified to satisfactorily execute the duties of the judge of Will County Court.

His ability is amply provided by the volume of his professional business and the importance of his clientele. They recognize him as a legal advisor who makes their interests his own, and paramount to all personal affairs. In the same manner he never neglects an opportunity to act public spiritedly in the interest of the progress of his community; for whenever there is a movement afoot to aid advancement he is alert to answer the call.

QUICK THINKING, FIRST AID SAVE WOMAN'S LIFE

The quick thinking and equally prompt action of Kenneth W. Planten, telephone installer at New Haven, Conn., saved the life of a woman who had been seriously injured when an oil stove exploded in her home recently. Planten learned his first aid through the course open to all telephone employees.

He was on his way to a job in West Haven when he heard an explosion. Turning, he saw thick smoke pouring from the windows of a house, and quickly climbed the nearest telephone pole, plugged in his lineman's test set, and notified the fire department. As he was coming down the pole, a neighbor rushed up and told him that a woman had been seriously injured. After calling an ambulance, he located the woman and found that her right hand had been nearly severed by the force of the explosion.

Again acting promptly, he snapped off his belt and used it as a makeshift tourniquet, winding it tightly around the woman's arm to stem the flow of blood. When the ambulance arrived the surgeon found that the blood flow had been checked. She was taken to the hospital where it was said she owed her life to the speed and skill of Planten's actions.

RESEARCH AIDS IN SOLUTION OF MINING PROBLEM

University Mining Engineers Make Important Contributions to Coal Industry.

The importance of research in the field of mining engineering, especially as it relates to coal mines in Illinois, is explained by Prof. A. C. Callen, head of the University of Illinois department of mining.

Research in mining has been carried on at the University since the establishment of the Engineering Experiment Station in 1903. This is the oldest engineering experiment station in the United States. The dean of the College of Engineering is director of the station.

Even farther back than 1903 the University had recognized the importance of coal mining within the State. Although Illinois was producing only one or two million tons of coal per year in 1867, the first Board of Trustees provided for a curriculum in mining and metallurgy. The curriculum was abandoned in 1894 but was re-established in 1903.

Prof. Callen pointed out that the Engineering Experiment Station does not engage in the business of commercial testing. Only in cases where proper facilities are not available at some commercial laboratory or through some consulting engineer does the University permit any tests of a commercial nature.

"Research is becoming more and more important," he said. "By its large industrial concerns have saved their very lives. But research is not an antidote to save life in an emergency. It takes time and patience. It is an investment for the long pull."

Possible Saving Outlined.

He mentioned one project that an expenditure of $3,700 resulted in a power saving at the rate of $5,500 per year, in one mine alone. What was done in that mine could be done at many mines in the state and nation—the extent of the savings depending upon the conditions in the particular mine. The research problem was a study of mine ventilation, cleaning and straightening the air courses resulted in the savings.

Research in the friability of Illinois coals resulted in the finding some coals as friable as Pocahontas up to some as high as anthracite or Jellico, he said.

The experiment station has determined with a great degree of accuracy the approximate limits of purity of coals that may be obtained with present cleaning methods.

Recently Prof. D. R. Mitchell has completed an X-ray study of coals that convinces him that "if Illinois coal mine operators want to compete successfully within the industry they will have to set up cleaning plants for their mined product."

There is more interest in Illinois today in the subject of coal cleaning than at any time within the last 20 years," Professor Callen told the visitors.

He mentioned other work done by the department of mining engineering. Bulletins on the behavior of overlying strata after the removal of coal. Systems of mining coal with special reference to the percentage of extraction.

A study on the storage of coal by Prof. H. H. Stoeck, first head of the department, and Prof. S. W. Parr, internationally known chemist.

Careful studies of haulage, skip hoisting, and power distribution have been made.

Five bulletins on mine ventilation have been published.

Prof. Callen also pointed out that these investigations result in the training and development of skilled research workers.

The Great University (An Editorial)

The University of Illinois is one of the greatest universities in the United States.

Aside from the education it provides for the thousands of young men and women of the state, aside from its scientific achievements, which each year are worth many times the cost of the institution, it performs a public service which cannot be measured in dollars or in numbers of students educated. It is simply that the students who have come under its influence have received cultural stimulation and have developed ideals of public service which are bound to make more useful citizens of them, and these they pass on to others with whom they associate when they leave the University.

Thus the University exerts an influence for better citizenship on thousands of people who have never had an opportunity to go to college. The institution deserves, and needs, the support of every citizen of Illinois.

Low University Tuition Provides Chance for All

Costs Are Only $70 Per Year and "Whatever Else You Spend."

Seventy dollars tuition and "whatever else you want to spend" is what it costs a student to attend the University of Illinois for one year.

Compared with many other leading universities and colleges the costs on the Urbana-Champaign campus are extremely low. Fees at many institutions range as high as $300 and $400 a year.

Living costs and other expenses have dropped enormously during recent years. A non-working student can attend Illinois for a full year and yet spend only $400. It has been found. Some spend even less. A more liberal budget for both men and women shows that $642 will provide a year's education at the University, and even allow one to belong to a fraternity or sorority. It all depends on the boy or girl.

"After all, the real cost of a higher education depends a great deal on the individual," says Dean of Men Fred Turner. "A few students may attend the University for two semesters or less than the minimum budget, but I say they are the exceptions rather than the rule."

"The more liberal budget will meet the needs of the majority of Illinois students. This amount, in many cases, will cover all costs including fraternity or sorority dues, while for other individuals it may not."

"One item that helps to keep costs down is the low tuition fee charged at the University of Illinois," Dean Turner pointed out. "Seventy dollars a year is the tuition."

The University of Illinois has many advantages. Members of the faculty rank highly in the educational world. Located in the very progressive but quiet communities of Urbana-Champaign, the University offers a scholarly environment for students not always found in other localities. The general moral tone about the campus is high.

Having the advantages of the great metropolitan area, where essential clinical material is plentiful, three of the professional departments of the University are located in Chicago. The Colleges of Medicine, Dentistry, and Pharmacy are all situated there.

University officials believe that there are available more facilities for skilled advice and direction for students at Illinois than at most small colleges. The offices of the Deans of Men and Women find student thronging to them daily for suggestions and advice on problems of the most intimate personal nature. Other faculty members also give daily advice to their students.

New admission requirements adopted recently by the Board of Trustees give special consideration to students who have shown superior scholarship in high school and provide for the admission of superior graduates of unaccredited four year secondary schools.

Location and History of the University of Illinois

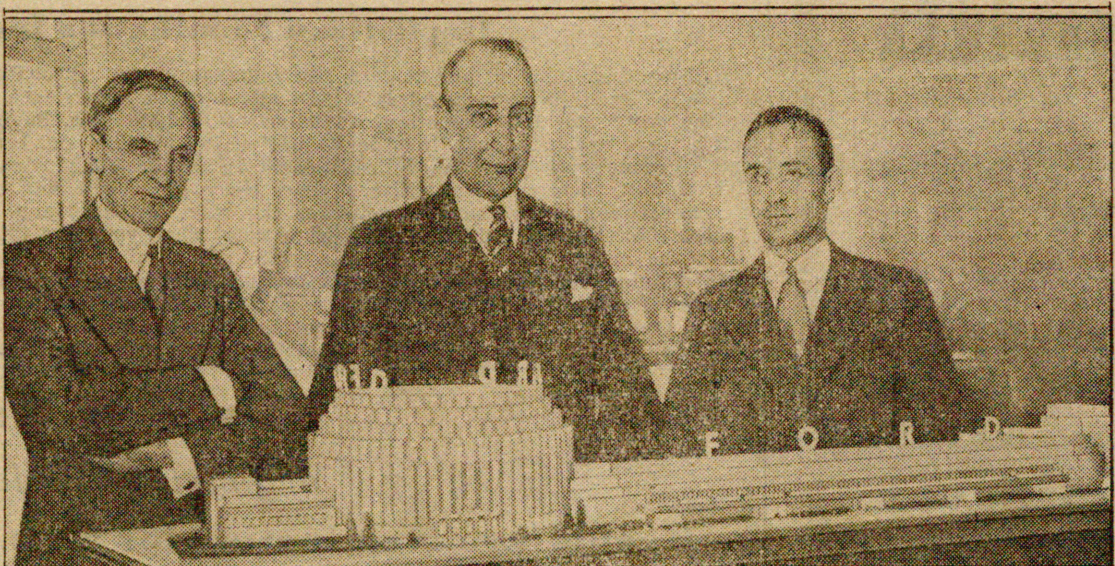

The main campus of the University of Illinois is situated in Urbana-Champaign, in Champaign County about fifty miles northeast of the geographical center of the State and 128 miles south of Chicago. The campus lies partly in the city of Urbana and partly in the city of Champaign. The two municipalities form one community of about thirty-five thousand inhabitants. State highway routes, 10, 25, and 39 all enter the twin cities. It is also served by four railroad systems.

The College of Medicine, the College of Dentistry, and the College of Pharmacy, are all located in Chicago, near the Cook County Hospital.

James O'Donnell Bennett, writing in the Chicago Tribune, said: "The University of Illinois is a vast laboratory of science and citizenship built by and for the people of Illinois. It is known throughout the world for discoveries that have made buildings safer to live in, trains safer to ride, and tracks safer to run. Its discoveries are always at the world's service and the whole world seeks its service."

The University of Illinois, established February 28, 1867, was one of the original land grant colleges made possible by the Federal Government in 1862. It opened on March 3, 1868, with the registration of 50 students and three faculty members.

FORD TO BUILD HUGE EXPOSITION AT THE 1934 CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR

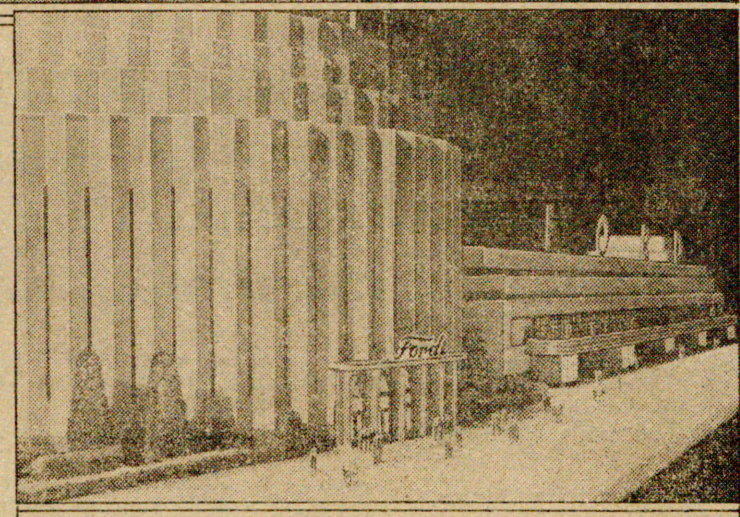

A GREAT Ford Exposition, portraying the tremendous part the arts, sciences and virtually every other industry plays in the manufacture of today's motor cars, is planned by the Ford Motor Company for the 1934 World's Fair.

The Ford Exposition will be housed in a giant building 860 feet long to be built in the heart of the fair grounds on an 11-acre plot bordering Lake Michigan and flanking the main fair boulevard. Construction of the building will start Mar. 1.

In the dominant central building will be housed Henry Ford's "Drama of Transportation," depicting the development of wheeled vehicles from the chariots of ancient Egyptian kings to modern motor cars. Every model of Ford car made since 1903 will be included.

In the smaller building to the left will be housed some of the priceless historic exhibits from the Edison Institute at Dearborn, Mich., including the one-story brick workshop, complete with the original tools, where Mr. Ford in 1893 built with his own hands his first motor car. This first car will be displayed in side the shop.

The main exposition building will

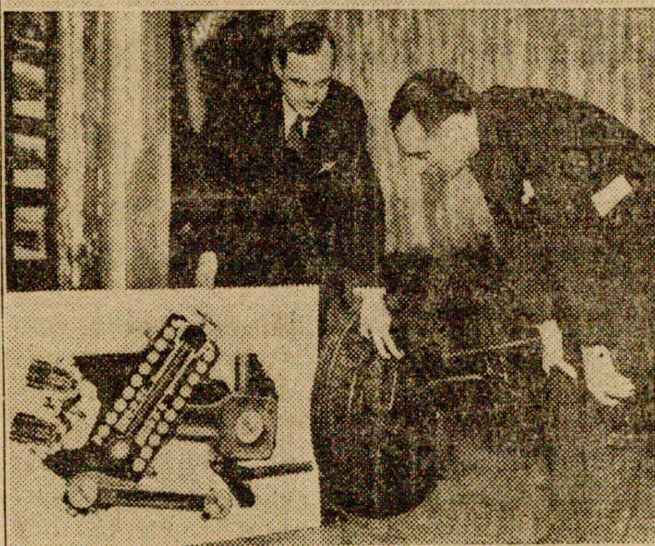

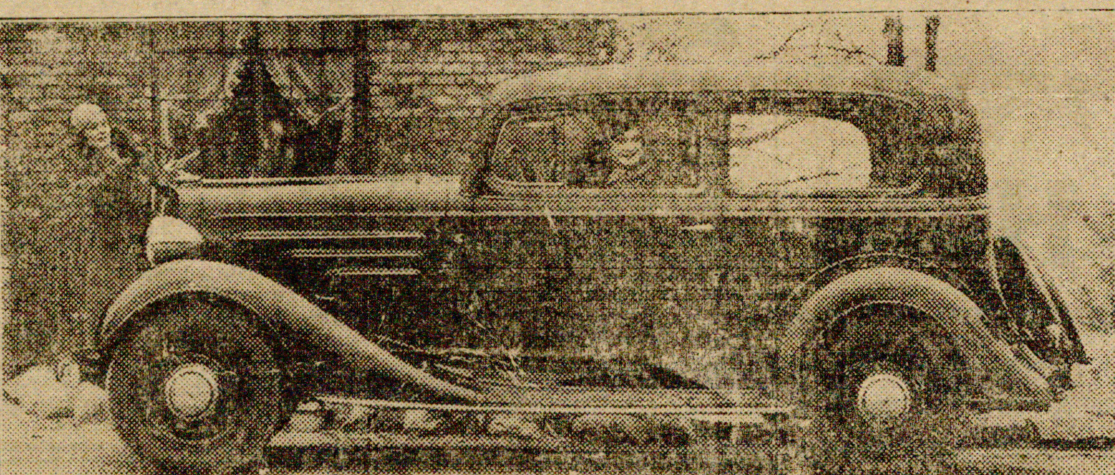

Henry Ford and Edsel B. Ford show to Rufus C. Dawes (center), president of the World's Fair, the scale model of the giant Ford Exposition building to be built at the 1934 Fair. (Lower) The Ford building as it will be seen from Leif Eriksen drive. Opposite the building will be a huge park bordering Lake Michigan.

display an imposing array of exhibits, most of them in action, show how steel, aluminum and other metals, soy beans, corn, wool, cotton and other farm products and the products of myriad industries are converted into car parts. The building also will house displays of cars and a big movie theater. Along the east side will be an open-air balcony equipped with chairs and lounges where hundreds may relax.

Across the drive fronting the lake will be a big Ford Park, beautifully landscaped and also fitted with seats and other comforts for fair crowds.

New "Knee-Action" Chevrolet Gives Passengers Ride Like a Glide

In the design and development of the new 1934 Chevrolet, particular attention has been given to driver and passenger comfort, all annoying sensations of disagreeable sound and feeling having been eliminated. The upper photo shows the new Chevrolet coach with its long, sleek lines. Wind rush has been eliminated by the Fisher No Draft Ventilators and the new streamlined bodies. Chevrolet's "Knee-Action" wheels enjoy the advantage of being completely enclosed in a weathertight housing; the coil springs and shock absorbers ride in a bath of oil. William E. Holler, Chevrolet's general sales manager, is shown at the left holding a chart which shows the internal construction of the system. The radiator of the new car has added beauty through its graceful and sharply pointed design. Smartness has been the theme in every line of this year's Chevrolet.

The driver and passengers in the new 1934 Chevrolet get a ride like the glide of an airplane. One of the main factors in improving the riding qualities of the new car to such a great extent is the "Knee-Action"—or independently sprung front wheels, to use the technical term.

So much has been written about independent springing that the public has doubtless concluded that it is something too technical to understand. As a matter of fact, there is nothing complicated about either the principle involved or the construction of the system. Chevrolet's "Knee-Action" enjoys the advantage of being enclosed in a welded weathertight housing in which the entire spring mechanism and shock absorbers ride up and down in a bath of oil.

An automobile gives a perfect ride when both the front and rear springs have the same "frequency," or tension. Actually this has been impossible to carry out in the past because the front springs had to be over twice as "stiff" as the rear springs in order to hold the front axle, wheels and brakes in place. In independent springing, the wheels and spring mechanism are rigidly attached directly to the frame and there is no front axle. By relieving the front springs of the task of carrying wheels and axle, therefore, it became possible to make the front springs as "soft" as the rear springs. When the new Chevrolet strikes an irregularity in the road, both front and rear move up and down with the same frequency—there is no inclination on the part of the rear end of the car to leap into the air and throw the passengers forward and upward.

Chevrolet's "Knee-Action" has additional advantages all contributing to a comfort in riding never before thought possible in a motor car. There is a decided improvement in handling, steering, safety at high speeds and tire economy.

In design, the front spring is a neat, compact and efficient unit, as Mr. Holler points out in the above picture. The entire spring mechanism is attached rigidly to the frame. From this enclosed unit the wheels spring vertically at the ends of strong, steel horizontal arms.

OPERATOR STICKS TO POST AS HER HOME BURNS

Although her home was being destroyed by fire and she could not ascertain whether or not members of her family were safe, Miss Trudie Maris, night telephone operator at Troup, Tex., refused to abandon her post at the switchboard one night recently until another operator could reach the scene and relieve her. Attempts to persuade her to leave were in vain. When she reached home, the fire was beyond control and all her clothing and other possessions were destroyed.

Movie Aide Shows Pilot How It's Done

Phyllis Laughton, English film instructor, who recently flew from New York to Los Angeles, en route to Hollywood, gives Pilot Jimmy Roe some pointers on speaking clearly into the transmitter of his radio telephone.

Phyllis Laughton, who was recently imported from England to Hollywood as a director of "diction, decorum and deportment" for a motion picture studio, flew from New York to Los Angeles, and during the trip took advantage of the opportunity to instruct pilot Jimmy Roe how to speak clearly into the mouthpiece of his radio telephone transmitter.

Most of the transport planes now in use in the United States are equipped for complete two-way radio telephone communications, as well as for receiving radio beacon signals. The Western Electric radio telephone system is used as standard equipment. The daily average of scheduled plane miles on air transport routes in the United States is approximately 136,319 miles, and transport planes using Western Electric radio telephone equipment account for about 107,347 of these miles.

Seven of the leading airplane manufacturers in the country now include such equipment in the standard design of all their transport planes. These firms are the Aircraft Development Company, Boeing Airplane Company, Curtiss-Wright Airplane Company, Douglas Aircraft Corporation, General Aviation Corporation, Northrop Corporation and Stinson Aircraft Corporation.

SOLAR PHENOMENA AFFECT RADIO WAVES

Engineers Study Sun's Activities for Causes of Variations in Transmission Efficiency

If you are using the telephone, and there is some interruption on the line, you wouldn't expect the source of the trouble to be very remote. But if it happened to be the overseas radio telephone you were using, then the seat of the difficulty might be 93,000,000 miles away.

For transmission conditions on the overseas telephone circuits react to the gigantic influences of the sun. As a result, the engineers responsible for the operation and maintenance of the overseas service find it necessary to consider the effects of solar activity.

Affect Overseas Service

At least one aspect of solar influence is familiar to everyone. That is the movements of the earth with respect to the sun, which provide night, day and the different seasons. Another factor, however, which is highly important to those concerned with radio telephone service involves the changes in solar activity and the rotation of the sun. For when solar conditions are abnormal, it becomes increasingly difficult to keep the service at its normal high efficiency. These engineers, therefore, are constantly investigating changes in our most powerful source of energy, the sun.

When there is a departure from the normal with regard to radio transmission, the earth's magnetism, and the aurora borealis, a change in the activity of the sun is usually observed. Unusual appearances in certain areas of the sun generally accompany such changes in its activity. The most conspicuous of these are sun spots, the most noticeable of a series of phenomena which include bright patches on its surface, clouds of hydrogen and calcium gases, regions of shooting flames, increases in the streamers of the solar corona and changes in sun temperature.

"WHY SHOULD I GO TO FLORIDA when we've got Gas Heat!"

An informal interview with Mr. Thomas E. Gorey, 504 Herkimer St., Joliet, Ill.

LOOK at a man enjoying a vacation in his own home! It's Mr. Thomas E. Gorey—just one of more than 20,000 home owners now heating with gas.

"No work, nothing to worry about—why should I go to Florida when we've got gas heat," says Mr. Gorey. "The fuel is always there, and it never runs out. The house is always cozy and warm. If a blizzard comes along you're never caught short, and that means a lot to a fellow's peace of mind."

"And gas heat is absolutely clean. I actually don't think we'll have to do any decorating this spring."

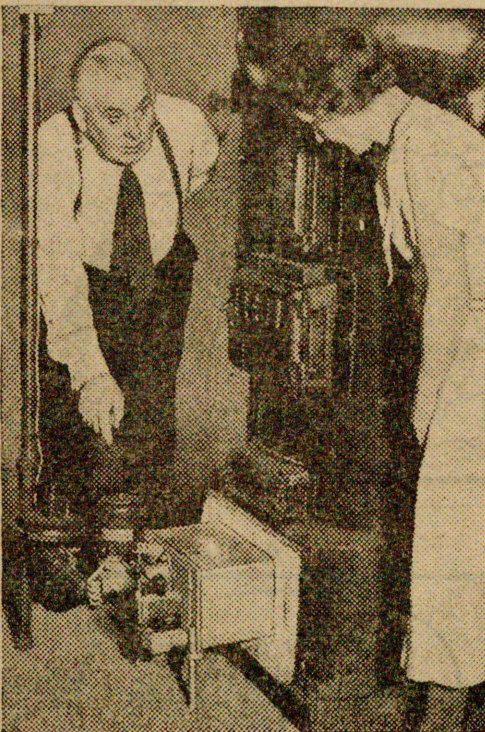

Thousands switching to gas heat as rates go down

Imagine your home free from soot, dust, dirt, and furnace drudgery! Imagine getting just the temperatures you want, night and day, by adjusting a little thermostat on the wall. Why put up with furnace worries any longer, when rates for gas heat are so low? Think of it—gas heating rates are now only half of what they were during the 1930-31 heating season.

And—you can try gas heat without investing one cent! We will install a burner in your present furnace or boiler at our own expense. You pay only the rental on the equipment, which amounts to $3 a month in the average home. This charge is included with the bill for the gas you use. You try it for a month, two months, a year. And if within the year you find that you are not completely satisfied with gas, we will take it out at our expense and replace your former heating equipment in good workmanlike order. But—if you decide to keep gas heat—as we think you will—the rental you have paid applies on the purchase price of the equipment.

Act now!

Don't delay! It is pure folly not to investigate this liberal offer on gas heat when it brings so many comforts and conveniences. Call your nearest Public Service office for full information.

Mrs. Gorey shows her daughter Mary the simplicity of the gas heating unit. It automatically maintains the exact temperature you want—every hour, day and night.

If not—and you are the sole judge—out it comes and your former heating system is re-installed AT OUR EXPENSE. We make this offer because of our confidence in the perfection of gas heat.

"Sap's Runnin'!"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

DO YOU remember those charming sketches of old-time farm life which Charles Dudley Warner published in a book under the title of "Being a Boy"? One of them, you will recall, was about "The Sugar Camp" and in it he said:

"As I remember the New England boy (and I am very intimate with one), he used to be on the qui vive in the spring for the sap to begin running. I think he discovered it as soon as anybody. Perhaps he knew it by a feeling of something starting in his own veins—a sort of spring stir in his legs and arms, which tempted him to stand on his head, or throw a handspring, if he could find a spot of ground from which the snow had melted. The sap stirs early in the legs of a country boy, and shows itself in uneasiness in the toes, which get tired of boots, and want to come out and touch the soil just as soon as the sun has warmed it a little. The country boy goes bare-foot just as naturally as the trees burst their buds, which were packed and varnished over in the fall to keep the water and the frost out. Perhaps the boy has been out digging into the maple trees with his jack knife; at any rate, he is pretty sure to announce the discovery as he comes running into the house in a great state of excitement—as if he has heard a hen cackle in the barn—with, 'Sap's runnin'!' "

Yes, "sap's runnin'!"—in the New England states, in New York, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, in fact, wherever hard maples are native to the soil. On hundreds of farms in those states blue smoke, curling up into the air above the trees in a "sugar bush," tells the passerby that the "sugar camp" is in operation and that here is being produced those two finest of all native sweets, maple sirup and maple sugar. And if that passerby has ever known the joys of maple sugar time, the sight of that smoke and the smells which drift toward him from the sugar camp will make memories tug at his heartstrings and it will be difficult for him to pass on by.

For as Charles Dudley Warner says: "In my day, maple sugar making used to be something between picnicking and being shipwrecked on a fertile island where one should save from the wreck tubs and augers, and great kettles and pork, and hen's eggs and rye-and-Indian bread, and begin at once to lead the sweetest life in the world. I am told that it is something different nowadays, and that there is more desire to save the sap, and make good, pure sugar, and sell it for a large price, than there used to be, and that the old fun and picturesqueness of the business are pretty much gone. I am told that it is the custom to carefully collect the sap and bring it to the house, where there are built brick arches, over which it is evaporated in shallow pans; and that pains are taken to keep the leaves and sticks and ashes and coals out of it; and that the sugar is clarified; and that, in short, it is a money making business, in which there is very little fun, and that the boy is not allowed to dip his paddle into the kettle of boiling sugar and lick off the delicious sirup. The prohibition may improve the sugar, but it is cruel to the boy."

Those words were written more than half a century ago ("Being a Boy" was first printed in 1877 and Houghton, Mifflin and Company of Boston got out a second edition 20 years later, illustrated with photographs by Clifton Johnson, "lovingly taken from the real life and heart of New England," which aid in preserving the charm of those truly "good old days"). If Charles Dudley Warner were alive today he would find that in some places where maple sugar is made the "fun and picturesqueness" are gone even more than they were when he wrote. For instance, in the state with which, more than any other, we associate thoughts of maple sugar, there's a man, known as the "champion sugar maker of Vermont," who has devised an intricate system of iron pipes leading from every one of the trees in his maple grove to huge evaporators in the sugar house, and this network of pipes, more than 23,000 feet in length, sends a steady stream of sap into the place where it is converted into maple sirup and maple sugar.

But, despite this example of modern efficiency applied to a business rich in tradition, there still are sugar camps in many places where the sap drips through "spiles" made of sumach or alder into wooden sap buckets (just like the ones made famous by President Coolidge during his administration); where it is collected into great wooden tubs or barrels on sleds, drawn by a yoke of oxen or a team of plodding horses; where it is boiled down in great iron or copper kettles; where they still hang a piece of fat salt pork by a string from the pole over the kettle so that it is about two inches from the top edge to keep the sap from boiling over; and where they will let you dip some of the bubbling sirup out of the kettle and pour it on the snow where it forms almost immediately that delicacy of all delicacies—maple sugar wax. No, not all of the fun and picturesqueness has been taken out of maple sugar time by modern methods and "new-fangled notions" of efficiency in production. Like so many other items in our national diet, we owe the addition of maple sirup and maple sugar to the Indians. There is an interesting legend about the way the red man discovered maple sugar. According to the story, a certain Woksis, a mighty hunter, was out one day in search of game and his diligent squaw, whose name was Moqua, was busy embroidering a pair of moccasins to surprise him when he came back home. But she knew, as all wives know, that in addition to a surprise she had to have an evening meal awaiting her lord.

So she hastily cut off a piece of moose meat and set it to boil in the water which ran from the maple tree at the door of her tepee—since the tree was nearer than the spring. Then she bent so interestedly over her embroidery that she forgot all about the moose meat and the sweet water boiled away into a thick, brown sirup and formed a crusty sweetness around the meat.

When Woksis returned, he graciously accepted the moccasins with their bead-embroidered bears but he exclaimed with delight when his teeth sank into the daintiest morsel that he had ever tasted. Eagerly he devoured the meat and called for the kettle so that he could lick it clean. Then he went out in his new moccasins—saying never a word about them—and told all his tribe how Kosekusheth, the heaven-sent instructor, had taught his Moqua how to make a delicious food by boiling the juice of maple.

Soon this knowledge spread to all the tribes and every spring saw them gashing the sugar maples with their hatchets and gathering the sap in containers made from birchbark. It was then boiled in earthen pots (and later, after the coming of the white man), in iron kettles which they obtained from traders, into which heated stones were dropped to facilitate the boiling. The early settlers were quick to appreciate this toothsome native delicacy and in many a pioneer home maple sugar was the only sweetening ever used. But they improved upon the Indians' method of making it—mainly in the matter of cleanliness—and maple sugar time became one of the traditions of American farm life.

For a description of that delightful period in the farm year one can do no better than to refer to Charles Dudley Warner again, and see it, as he saw it, through the eyes of Young

1. Two Girl Scouts from Manhattan learn the joys of maple sugar time in their national camp at Pleasantville, N. Y.
2. "Drip! Drip! Drip!" Maple trees are a-trickle near Keene, N. H.
3. The old fashioned way of making maple sugar. Boiling the sap in an iron kettle over an open fire. In a little while those youngsters will be pouring the thick sirup out on the snow to make "maple sugar wax."
4. The sugar house in a Vermont maple sugar camp.
5. First he "taps" the tree with an auger, then he drives in a "spile," then he hangs a bucket on it, and Nature does the rest!

America. After telling how the boy comes running to the house with his excited announcement of "Sap's runnin'!" he continues:

"And then, indeed, the stir and excitement begin. The sap-buckets, which have been stored in the garret over the wood house, and which the boy has occasionally climbed up to look at with another boy, for they are full of sweet suggestions of the annual spring frolic, are brought down and set out on the south side of the house and scalded. The snow is still a foot or two deep in the woods, and the ox sled is got out to make a road to the sugar camp, and the campaign begins. The boy is everywhere present, superintending everything, asking questions, and filled with a desire to help the excitement.

"In the first place the men go about and tap the trees, drive in the spouts, and hang the buckets under. The boy watches all these operations with the greatest interest. He wishes that sometime when a hole is bored in a tree that the sap would spout out in a stream as it does when a cider barrel is tapped; but it never does, it only drops, sometimes almost in a stream, but on the whole slowly, and the boy learns that the sweet things of life have to be patiently waited for, and do not usually come otherwise than drop by drop.

"Then the camp is to be cleared of snow. The shanty is re-covered with boughs. In front of it two enormous logs are rolled nearly together, and a fire is built between them. Forked sticks are set at each end, and a long pole is laid on them, and on this are hung the great caldron kettles. The huge hogheads are turned right side up, and cleaned out to receive the sap that is gathered. And now, if there is a good 'sap run,' the establishment is under full way.

"The great fire that is kindled up is never let out, night or day, as long as the season lasts. Somebody is always cutting wood to feed it; somebody is busy most of the time gathering in the sap; somebody is required to watch the kettles that they do not boil over, and to fill them. It is not the boy, however; he is too busy with things in general to be of any use in details.

"He likes to boil eggs with the hired man in the hot sap; he likes to roast potatoes in the ashes, and he would live in the camp day and night if he were permitted. . . . The great occasions for the boy, though, are the time of 'sugaring off.' Sometimes this used to be done in the evening, and it was made the excuse for a frolic in the camp. The neighbors were invited; sometimes even the pretty girls from the village, who filled all the woods with their sweet voices and merry laughter. . . .

"At these sugar parties everyone was expected to eat as much sugar as possible; and those who are practiced in it can eat a great deal. It is a peculiarity about eating warm maple sugar that, though you may eat so much of it one day as to be sick and loathe the thought of it, you will want it the next day more than ever. At the 'sugaring off' they used to pour the hot sugar upon the snow, where it congealed, without crystallizing, into a sort of wax, which I do suppose is the most delicious substance that was ever invented. And it takes a great while to eat it. If one should close his teeth firmly on a ball of it, he would be unable to open his mouth until it dissolves. The sensation while it is melting is very pleasant, but one cannot converse.

"The boy used to make a big lump of it and give it to the dog, who seized it with great avidity, and closed his jaws on it, as dogs will do on anything. It was funny the next moment to see the expression of perfect surprise on the dog's face when he found that he could not open his jaws. He shook his head; he sat down in despair; he ran 'round in a circle; he dashed into the woods and back again. He did everything except climb a tree and howl. It would have been such a relief to him if he could have howled! But that was the one thing he could not do."

One's Memories Either Benediction or Shame

In a sense there is wisdom in living from day to day. The past is gone and the future is always with us, and as we make that glorious, we make the whole of life glorious. And when the future comes we can review the past without shame or fear. And in such lives memory will be a benediction. That is what wise men will strive to make it, for there is no more civilizing influence working in human affairs. A man without memory would not be essentially different from "the beasts that perish." Whatever memory is, it is certainly a great power for good, though men may make it a dreadful power for evil. The choice seems to be with the individual. He can live nobly and have noble recollections, or live basely and be afraid to review his life. Like most choices, this one is of daily recurrence. There is the question of self-knowledge which is obviously involved but which will not be discussed here. Not that it is not important—for it is tremendously important.—Indianapolis News.

Game to the End

The Jones family went for a day's outing to the wonderful cave of echoes. When they reached home Mr. Jones noticed that his wife was not present.

"Do you know where your mother is?" he asked his daughter.

"Oh! I expect she's trying to have the last word."

MEDICAL ADVICE

If you want to . . . relieve constipation gently and safely . . . take the exact dose suited to your need . . . avoid danger of bowel strain —use a liquid laxative

Can constipation be safely relieved? "Yes!" say medical men. "Yes!" declare thousands who have followed their advice and know.

You are not apt to cure your constipation with salts, pills and tablets, or any habit-forming cathartic. But you can safely relieve this condition just by gentle regulation with a suitable liquid laxative.

chance it. The contents of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is stated plainly on the label; fresh herbs, pure pepsin, active senna.

Its very taste tells you Syrup Pepsin is wholesome. A delightful taste, and delightful action. Safe for expectant mothers, and children. Drug stores have it, ready for use, in big bottles.

Why Hospitals use a Liquid Laxative

The dose of a liquid laxative can be measured. The action can thus be regulated to suit your individual need. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will it irritate the kidneys.

The right liquid laxative will bring a perfect movement, with no discomfort at the time, or afterward.

The unwise use of strong cathartics may often do more harm than good.

In buying any laxative, read the label. If it contains a doubtful drug, don't take it. If you don't know what is in it, don't

THE TEST:

This test has proved to many men and women that their trouble was not "weak bowels," but strong cathartics!

First: select a properly prepared liquid laxative. Second: take the dose you find suited to your system. Third: gradually reduce the dose until bowels are moving of their own accord.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has the highest standing among liquid laxatives, and is the one generally used.

DOCTOR'S ANSWERS To Questions

By P. C. Cripps, M. D.

Q. I get attacks of indigestion and the gas presses up around my heart. I belch gas frequently and I have a burning sensation in my chest. What can I do to help this condition?—"Anxious."

A.—Usually such cases are benefited by strict diet of vegetables or milk. A good tonic like Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, is used by many people and has my greatest confidence. To be had at any drug store.

R. N. A. JUVENILE NOTES
The regular meeting of the Juveniles for the month of March was attended by 15 members. Glad to say all officers were present.

Grandma Hick was the only R. N.
A. member outside of the director and assistant, that seemed to remember the children's meeting.
Grandma only missed one meeting last year. Hope she does not miss any this year.

Seven points of bunco were played and cake, with a St. Patrick touch of green, was served to the children.
Joan Christ was absent on account of illness. She is better at this writing. Elsworth Wannemacher did not reel very good but he did not miss,
and was in his station.

Richard Anderson has a cold, we hope he is better now.

The next meeting is April 14, 1:30 p. m., Community hall. The children voted to be on time, so let's see if we can't.

An Easter Monday dance will be held at the Saenger Hall on April 2.

The Tinley Park Community Hatchery is doing a rushing business in the baby chick line. This week another hatching of 2500 chicks is to come off.

Henry Kuch celebrated his 92nd birthday at his home at Knox, Indiana, March 9. The children were all home to honor the event. J. C. Kuch his son lives north of Tinley Park.

The H. B. F. Club met with Miss Viola Wilke Friday.

There is quite a lot of activity in the Elmoore subdivisions. A number of homes have been rented to Chicago people who are preparing to move here this week and next week.

Tinley Park will have a full list of candidates on the village election ticket this year. Those who have filed are:

For village trustees, Art Schoen-eck, Henry J. Bettenhausen, E. R.
Rice, Clarence Fulton, Selby Hirsch
James, English.

For village clerk: Chas. Neimann and R. J. Hug.

William E. Austin

OF JOLIET
CANDIDATE FOR DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION FOR PROBATE JUDGE

Among those who devote a lifetime to unraveling the problems of law will be found Attorney William E. Austin of Joliet, candidate for the Democratic nomination for Probate Judge. It is therefore in a spirit of appreciation that we refer to William E. Austin. He belongs to that coterie of men in the professions who represent the best talent in their respective fields. In him we find a man of sterling qualities—a public spirited worker for the commonwealth. He is doing all in his power to help make the world a safer and better place in which to live. He believes in the advancement of the city, county, state and nation and he administers his services to each and one and all alike in that spirit of sincerity that makes him a legal asset as well as one of Joliet's most substantial citizens.

NATION'S YEARLY TELEPHONE CONVERSATIONS
TOTAL BILLIONS; AVERAGE 222 PER PERSON

U. S. Also Leads in Number of Telegraph Messages Sent

Telephone statisticians have completed a survey of the use of telephone and telegraph facilities throughout the world. The survey covers the year 1931, the latest period for which comparable figures are available.

This study shows that, next to the United States, the country where the greatest number of telephone conversations takes place is Japan.
Canada holds third place, Germany fourth, and Great Britain and Northern Ireland fifth. The figures give 27,500,000,000 telephone conversations during 1931 for the United States, 3,326,148,000 for Japan, 2,565, 641,000 for Canada, 2,376,000,000 for Germany, and 1,590,000,000 for Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Next come France and Sweden, with 847,206,000 and 842,000,000 telephone conversations respectively.

They are followed by Poland, Spain, Denmark, Austria and The Netherlands.

During the year, 185,000,000 telegrams were sent in the United States, 51,142,000 in Japan, 47,312, 000 in Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and 33,510,000 in France, Spain, Germany, Australia and Canada follow as regards the total number of telegrams, in the order named.

Telephone conversations in the United States averaged 222 per capita. On a per capita basis, Canada outranks the United States in telephone conversations, and New Zealand is in third place, with Denmark and Sweden following. On the same basis, New Zealand leads in the use of telegrams, with Australia second and the United States third. Telegrams include inland and also outgoing international messages, while telephone conversations represent completed local and toll or long distance messages.

Pea Roast and Cutlets

SOUNDS peculiar, doesn't it, to write about a pea roast and pea cutlets, just as if peas could be cut up like a meat animal. You'll find that the recipes we mean are not peculiar, but peculiarly good, though we'll have to admit that the first one is just a trifle nutty. It is

Pea and Walnut Roast: Mix lightly together one and one-half cups pea pulp, one cup soft bread crumbs, one-half cup chopped walnuts, one-fourth cup butter, two-thirds cup canned tomato soup, one beaten egg, salt, pepper and onion juice. Put into a buttered baking dish or loaf pan, and bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees, for from thirty to forty-five minutes, or until set and brown.

Serve with hot canned tomato soup, undiluted. This serves eight.

These Cutlets Are Cute

Tomato and Pea Cutlets: Combine one cup drained canned peas, one-half cup very thick white sauce and two slightly-beaten egg yolks. Drop by spoonfuls into hot, buttered skillet and fry brown, turning over once. Dip eight slices ripe tomato in flour, and sprinkle with salt and pepper.
Sauté in the fat in which the cut-lets cooked. Serve a cutlet on each slice of tomato. This recipe serves eight.*
